Frequently Asked Questions

How many hours do students typically serve in the community for a service learning course?

It varies, but generally at least 20-30 hours. The service hours may include time spent researching or developing a product or paper.

What does the term “in kind” mean? Do I have to have an in-kind donation for my budget worksheet?

“In-kind” means the goods or services are donated or funded from another source. The Service Learning Fellowship process does not require in-kind donations. The in-kind column may help explain your budget request (for example, if the project will cost $6,000 and we can only award $2,000, the review committee will wonder how you will fund the remainder of your request.)

How are service learning courses typically modeled?

CSUSB follows the S.E.R.V.E model; here are the five steps for effective service learning: 1) Select the Service; 2) Educate and Inform; 3) Respond to the Need; 4) Value Significance and Reflect; 5) Evaluate and Celebrate.

More information can be found in our Service Learning Webpage.

What is reflection and why is it important for service learning?

The process of reflection is a core component of service learning. Service learning practitioners and researchers have concluded that the most effective service learning experiences are those that provide structured opportunities for learners to critically reflect upon their service experience. The opportunities for reflection can enable learners to examine and form their beliefs, values, opinions, assumptions, judgments and practices related to an action or experience, gain a deeper understanding of them, and construct their own meaning and significance for future actions.

There are a wide range of meaningful reflective practices and strategies that can be incorporated into service learning, including the frequently used approaches listed below.

- Discuss and/or have a speaker on an issue that relates to the students' service experiences.
- Lead guided discussion questions in large or small groups that challenge students to think critically about their service experiences.
- Find events in the community that students can attend together and debrief about afterwards.
- Find articles, poems, stories or songs that relate to the service students are doing and create and discuss questions around relevant social issues. Or, ask students to write or bring in these items and describe how they reflect their service experience.
- Use case studies or scenarios for students to discuss.
- Ask students to create a map that shows how their service learning experience connects to larger issues at the state/national/global level.

- Have students view a video or documentary to elicit discussion about critical issues that relate to their service experiences.
- Write letters-to-the-editor or to government officials that address key community issues.
- Have students make a collage to express how they view their service site and their service.
- Have students maintain a print or electronic reflective journal. Writing in journals is widely used in service learning courses to promote reflection. Journaling exercises are most meaningful when instructors pose key questions for analysis and description concerning their opinions before and after the service learning experience.
