Pathways To Mental Health Treatment Among Mex. Americans with Schizophrenia

Department of Psychology, University of California, Los Angeles

Elma Lorenzo-Blanco & Steven R. López, Ph.D., Professor (Co-researchers)

- Coded interviews of family members whose relative suffers from schizophrenia to determine time lag between first sign of mental health problem and when formal mental health care was first obtained (Secondary data analysis from Karno et al. (1987) study: NIMH Research Scientist Development Award MH00351; NIMH Research Grant MH33502; NIMH Research Grant MH30911).
- Described the context of how the key relative fights to seek care. That is, what were the barriers encountered in seeking care, from whom did they get mental health care and who served as facilitators in seeking care.

Jan. 2005 – May 2008

Co-researcher

Conceptions of Schizophrenia: Bridging Culturally Shared and Individual Experiences

Department of Psychology, University of California, Los Angeles

Elma Lorenzo-Blanco (Primary Researcher) & Steven R. López, Ph.D., Prof.

- Coded interviews of family members whose relative suffers from schizophrenia to determine the causal and/or explanatory factors for the illness and the illness categories they used to describe the ill relative's illness (Secondary data analysis from Karno et al. (1987) study: NIMH Research Scientist Development Award MH00351; NIMH Research Grant MH33502; NIMH Research Grant MH30911).

- Objective of study: Apply contemporary notions of culture to advance our understanding of how Mexican American caregivers of ill relatives diagnosed with schizophrenia draw from available culturally shared knowledge (i.e., notions of “nervios”), their social context, and personal experiences when making sense of their ill relative’s illness.

Mar. 2004 – Dec. 2004

Research Intern
